

Test Certifiers approved to issue Location Test Certificates for LPG

The Hazardous Substance Regulations require sites storing over 100 kg of LPG to have a current location test certificate.

From March 2012, LPG suppliers must not supply LPG to a site holding more than 100 kg unless the site holds a location test certificate or is following the requirements of the approved code of practice "LPG Compliance 100 kg to 300 kg".

If a site storing over 100 kgs of LPG does not have a location test certificate, then you need to contact a test certifier to obtain a test certificate.

Test certifiers who can issue location test certificates for LPG are listed below. The certifiers are listed by region, but many are available to work outside their regions of residence. This list is current as at 23 November 2011.

Test certifiers are not employed by the Environmental Protection Authority (EPA) and there is no set fee for issuing test certificates. The cost for a certificate is a commercial arrangement between you and the test certifier.

If you have any questions, please contact your LPG supplier.

Further information about location test certificates is provided on the EPA website:
